

Listening for Cancer

John Viator can hear cancer coming. The MU biological engineer and his research team have developed a photoacoustic technique for listening at the cellular level. Currently, they can detect the spread of as few as 10 melanoma cells in a blood sample. In the future, they hope to make the device sensitive enough to hear a single skin cancer cell. Earlier detection means more cures.

Solutions for a Better Life

